

It was about joy and a hint of tears. It was about Euphoria and about the kids. Squealing fans of Delhi band Euphoria—the Dhoom boys—at Dilli Haat were there for the music. They were also there for a cause. The concert organised by Action for Autism in Delhi also featured a short film on autism and performances by the kids in whose aid the show was held. Their rendering of Elvis and Beatles numbers and We are the world was enough to move anyone to tears. And it did. Colombian ambassador to India, Maria Clara Betanear, wiped away a tear as she sat listening in the audience, next to the British high commissioner's wife Catherine Young. And though the remark from Euphoria's lead singer, "Thank god, there is a cause in this country other than AIDS," was quite uncalled for, you kind of knew he meant well.
